ask your real estate agent for the seller's inspection report, as well as a copy of their disclosure form. if the seller can't provide the report, then ask for a copy of the inspector's report. if the seller does provide a copy of the report, and the inspection is a few days old, there's no guarantee that the seller's disclosure form is still accurate. if the inspection was performed by the seller's inspector, then you can be sure that the problem is disclosed. that's because the seller's inspector is employed by the seller, and not by you. the seller's inspector is looking out for the seller, not you. the seller's inspector has a clear incentive to disclose problems, because if he doesn't, he's not going to get paid. most sellers have a real estate agent, so their inspector should be working on their behalf, so you can be sure that the disclosure is up to date. if you get an inspection report in the mail, make sure you ask the seller to have their inspector or seller perform a follow up inspection. that way you'll know the extent of the problem and can plan your remediation accordingly. inspector is a powerful tool for viewing and analysing http messages. here, you can see the difference between the response headers of a webservice and the content of the response. you can easily change the http headers of a response to view the result in the preview pane. inspector contains three panes which are used to view and control http messages. the problem pane displays the problem in a given response. the message pane is a convenient way to view the complete message, including its headers. the preview pane is used to view the original response in a browser.

a home inspector is only qualified to give an opinion about the condition of the property. a home inspector is not qualified to give an opinion about the value of the property. this type of claim should always be handled by a licensed insurance adjuster, appraiser, or attorney. the main functions of a foundation inspection is to locate and document structural problems that are significant enough to materially affect the home, such as cracks in the foundation, basement walls, basement floor, or crawl space. inspectors also check to make sure the foundation walls and floors are properly attached to the home. this includes checking for any visible gaps, cracks, or other defects. a foundation inspection should also check to make sure the foundation walls are well-anchored to the foundation. cracks in the foundation should be repaired before the home is sold. it is also important that the inspector check all of the building materials and construction methods used to build the home. while the home inspector may check the condition of the foundation, he or she may not be qualified to give an opinion on the value of the home. home inspectors can issue a report to the home owner about the property. the report can help the home owner make a decision about whether or not to sell the property. there are some specialized tabs in the inspector too. these include the http tabs, which show the structure of the http response and request messages, and the decoded tab, which shows the xml output from the decoder. the raw tab is still available for viewing the messages in their raw format. you can also use the decoder to extract a specific value from the response.
