JetAudio Base v1.9.9.9 JetAudio Plus v7.11.3101.jpgQ: List of set operations and their values I found this little drawing of the cartesian plane, in which it shows many set operations. I just got really curious on how this is possible, without doing it by hand. For example, can we determine which of two squares is bigger based on the given lines? A: Your drawing shows set membership, the result of the intersection operation and exclusive union. All three operations are definable in the logic of first-order set theory, although there are 'point-free' proofs. Definable in two ways: By a quantifier-free formula, which is a finite combination of connectives and quantifiers, either a single universal quantifier or a double universal quantifier. By an infinite formula, or an infinite combination of formulas, one of which is a quantifier-free formula. Definable in one way: By a formula in which all free variables are bound variables or variables in the subscripts. An example of the two statements 2 and 3 is the formulas:  $\forall x(x \in y) \wedge \neg (\neg x \vee x = y)$  which is a valid propositional formula. And  $\forall x(x \in y) \wedge \neg (\neg x \vee x = y)$
